ADDRESSING COVID-19 VACCINE HESITANCY: Pregnant Individuals & Other Vulnerable Populations

Continuing Education
Credits Offered

Though much progress has been made since the onset of the COVID-19 pandemic, health care workers must still manage new cases, new variants, and new information. This four-module course will address vaccine hesitancy among vulnerable populations, with an emphasis on pregnant and recently pregnant individuals, and the strategies health care professionals can implement to address these issues.

During this on-demand program, we will explore

- Key terms related to COVID-19 vaccine (vaccine hesitancy, vaccine confidence, vaccine uptake);
- Individuals and communities who are at higher risk for COVID-19;
- Possible reasons behind lack of vaccine confidence and lower vaccine uptake among specific high-risk communities (i.e. communities of color, pregnant individuals, individuals planning to become pregnant);
- Factors, including those related to the COVID-19 pandemic, that put individuals at greater risk for anxiety and depression during and after pregnancy;
- Prevention and intervention approaches to help individuals cope with anxiety and depression during and after pregnancy; and
- Strategies a provider can implement to reach high risk and vulnerable communities to improve vaccine confidence.

This work is funded in part by Grant 1NU58DP006373-03-00, Centers for Disease Control and Prevention, Maternal Infant Health Branch, State Perinatal Quality Collaboratives.
