

2024 Winter Fire School

Developing Emergency Services Instruction in the 21st Century

---

February 17th, 2024, 8:30 am – 5:00 pm

As fire and emergency services enter the twenty-first century, it is becoming more and more evident that instructors and training officers alike must understand and adapt to a new era of modern, technology-centered instructional practices. As digital learning continues to develop and expand across all aspects of educational services; instructors have to be motivated to take on the challenge of understanding the digital learning opportunities available and how to best apply them to fire and emergency services instruction.

This presentation is focused on the fundamental elements of digitized instruction and how it can be applied in fire and emergency services training programs. This presentation is designed to provide the fire and emergency services instructor with basic knowledge of current digital learning trends along with a guided framework on how to apply “best practice” digital learning within the training structure of our profession. The presentation will conclude with an examination of tips, tricks, and tools for digitized learning that instructors can take with them to diversify and modernize their instructional practices.

Instructor: Allan Bullock Assistant Chief Hagerstown Jefferson Township Fire Department

Allan is a 14-year member of the Hagerstown Jefferson Township Fire Department where he currently serves as Assistant Chief and Training Officer. In addition to these responsibilities, Allan has been an instructor at the local and district level for the last nine years. Allan holds a B.S. in Secondary Education from Indiana University and an M.A. in Military History from Norwich University.

Registration Link: <https://tinyurl.com/ys92k8av>

