Synthetic Marijuana Sale Against The Law

Communities across the country are dealing with K2, a synthetic form of marijuana. The Kentucky General Assembly passed a law banning the substance in Kentucky. The substance is often marketed as incense. K2 is also known as Spice, Demon, Khronic, Kush or Genie and sold openly in gas stations, corner stores, smoke shops and online and marketed to children as young as 8 years old. Concerned parents and guardians should talk to their children. If you know an establishment selling spice, please call the police tip line at 502-574-LMPD.

Trafficking in synthetic drugs is a Class D felony for the first offence and a Class C felony for each subsequent offense. Possession of synthetic drugs is a Class A misdemeanor for the first offense and a Class D felony for each subsequent offense.

The effects of synthetic cannabinoids can be unpredictable and sever or even life-threatening. "Spice" users report effects similar to those produced by marijuana:

- Elevated mood, relaxation, altered perception, symptoms of psychosis

Synthetic cannabinoids can also cause serious mental and physical health problems such as:

- sensations and images that seem real though they are not, extreme anxiety, confusion, paranoia, and unreasonable distrust of others.

"Heavy Burdens on Young Shoulders"

Tuesday, May 24, 2016 edition by Jane E. Brodway

In the normal scheme of things, parents and grandparents take care of children when they're sick or need help or sustenance. But in well over a million American families, this pattern is reversed, with children as young as 8, 9, or 10 partly or fully responsible for the welfare of adults or sibling they live with. They may have to shop, prepare meals, clean house, do the laundry and tend to the hygienic needs of family members unable to care for themselves. At the same time, these children must go to school, do their homework and attempt, but usually fail to participate in nonacademic activities like sports and friendship widely recognized as important to well-sounded development. The American Psychological Association says it remains largely a hidden problem because parents are often too embarrassed to tell schools how much they depend on their children and caregiving children fear being taken away from their parents.

Many of these youngsters often fall behind in school, suffer from sleep deprivation and struggle with depression, anxiety, and stress, said Gail G. Hunt of the National Alliance of Caregiving. She said 58% of these children are too worried to concentrate on their schoolwork yet few tell their teachers about their responsibilities at home. A 2006 study by the Bill and Melinda Gates Foundation found that 22% of high school dropouts in this country leave school to care for a family member. Dr. Connie SisKowski, a registered nurse in Boca Raton grew up as one of these young people. She started, in 2006, the Caregiving Youth Project, dedicated to helping young caregiver of ill, elderly or disabled family members with support from grants and private donations, her organization now called the American Association of Caregiving Youth works with school districts to identify children who need help navigating the complete demands of caregiving and school and still find some time to be a child.

Children are regularly helping relatives with physical or mental illness, disability, frailty associated with aging, substance misuse or other conditions. The Caregiving Youth project, now at 8 middle schools and 9 high schools in Florida, offers classes on topics like coping with stress and anger and managing finances. Along with home-care demonstrations and respite care, the project sponsors field trips, overnight camps and other recreational and social activities. They hope to expand the program to other schools throughout the country. Schools need to be made aware that the children's responsibilities may be reasons for incomplete homework, absenteeism and poor academic performance. The project offers in-home tutoring and study programs and even provides computers and printers for children who can't get to the library. After 4 house fires resulted from youthful cooking attempts the association began distributing slow cookers and fire extinguishers.

Perhaps most important, the children learn they are not alone and that there is help available. The kids feel valued, they learn what love is, and it flips the anger and frustration they may otherwise feel, Dr. SisKowski said. The project stays in their corner until they graduate from high school. Maybe this is a program that would work in Jefferson County.
