Homelessness in Louisville

You probably know someone who is or has been homeless. The 2015 census for the Louisville Metro Area shows that there were 6,129 individuals in shelters and 608 unsheltered individuals, for a total of 6,737 homeless people. This number includes 429 homeless families and 1,257 homeless children. The good news is that this is a 12% decrease from 2014 statistics, but homelessness is still a common problem and is likely more widespread than the numbers suggest. It is impossible to measure all of the people who stay with families and friends or who "couch-surf" but are actually homeless. These may be people that you know but they are not considered to be officially homeless. These people are called the "non-traditional homeless."

A person is homeless when he or she doesn't have a regular nighttime place to live, sleep, and stay. People may turn to temporary shelters, vehicles, public and park areas, or transitional housing (temporary shelter for people who are in between living arrangements because they are recovering from alcohol or drug addiction, have been recently hospitalized or incarcerated or who are leaving a home in which there was domestic violence). Homelessness can be caused by health problems, physical or mental disabilities, domestic violence, family conflicts, limited life choices, and a lack of support systems. Homelessness also includes those who are unable to maintain permanent housing or are losing housing due to eviction and have no other place to go.

Louisville has a high number of people that are on the edge of homelessness, like multiple families living in single-family homes, people living in substandard housing or those at risk of immediate eviction. For those people, just one bad event can cause them to become homeless. It is difficult to find the way out of homelessness because being homeless makes it more difficult to keep or find a job. In order to get out of homelessness, people can use Section 8 housing, supportive housing, or transitional housing to become more stable. The following are a few of the resources that are available for the Louisville community to access shelter and services that can help people to exit homelessness.
