the challenge

In November, Michiganders voted overwhelmingly to put abortion rights in our state constitution. Earlier this year, Governor Whitmer signed legislation repealing the state's 1931 law banning abortion without exceptions for rape or incest and criminalizing nurses and doctors for doing their jobs.

However, there are still many old laws that put politically motivated, medically unnecessary restrictions on abortion, forcing patients to drive hundreds of miles for care or mandating that patients receive biased, inaccurate information about their health.

With a US Supreme Court that's shown it can and will strip away basic rights, Michigan must be proactive and repeal antiquated state laws.

what's next

Pass the Reproductive Health Act, a package of bills to repeal outdated, politically motivated restrictions on abortion and other reproductive health care:

- Eliminate laws that criminalize abortion.
- Repeal waiting periods and other medically unnecessary hurdles that make it harder for women to get abortions and for doctors to treat their patients.
- Ensure everyone has access to abortion, regardless of where they live, work, or what type of insurance they have.
