

REQUEST FOR REVIEW BY THE CONVICTION REVIEW UNIT

The Conviction Review Unit (CRU) reviews claims of wrongful conviction from people who were convicted of felony crimes in Minnesota state courts. You may apply for review regardless of whether you were convicted at trial or pled guilty.

The CRU will review your case only if you meet these requirements:

1. You must have been convicted of a felony that was prosecuted by either the Office of the Attorney General or by a County Attorney's Office in the State of Minnesota.
2. You must present a plausible claim that you were wrongly convicted of the crime charged. (You were wrongly convicted if you did not commit the crime for which you were convicted and sentenced.)
3. There must be potential leads to reliable evidence that would back up your claim of wrongful conviction.

HERE'S WHAT YOU NEED TO KNOW BEFORE YOU APPLY

The Minnesota Conviction Review Unit, also known as the CRU, operates as an independent division of the Minnesota Attorney General's Office. The Attorney General is the chief law enforcement officer for the State of Minnesota.

If you complete this application, the CRU agrees to conduct an initial review of your case to determine whether you qualify for an in-depth investigation of your case.

Before you complete this application, please be aware of what the CRU can and cannot do for you.

The CRU cannot serve as your attorney. The CRU attorneys are prosecutors. They are not defense attorneys, and they cannot represent you. That means the CRU cannot provide you with legal advice, and what you say to us is not covered by attorney-client privilege.

The CRU can cooperate with you or your attorney to investigate your claims of wrongful conviction by gathering evidence that you may not have had access to, testing evidence that may not have been tested, and talking to witnesses who may shed light on your conviction.

If you are currently represented by an attorney, please consult your attorney before you submit this application. Your attorney will have valuable advice about whether you should apply and how applying to the CRU may affect your legal claims. If you and your attorney decide to apply to the CRU, we will work with your attorney to gather information about your case and share the information we have gathered with your attorney. The CRU will not communicate with you unless your attorney agrees.

The CRU agrees to conduct an initial review of your application as soon as it can. The time it takes to review your application will depend on the CRU's available resources and the number of applications we have received. The CRU will periodically update you in writing about the status of your application.

In its initial review, the CRU may contact the people you list in this application to find out more about what they know. The CRU may also contact the original prosecutor in your case, the victim, and witnesses who provided information or may have testified in your case.

After an initial review, if the CRU denies your application for assistance, the CRU will notify you or your attorney immediately, and we will explain the reasons for the denial.

If the CRU accepts your case for a more thorough review, we will cooperate with you or your attorney to fully investigate the basis of your claims. If you do not have an attorney, with your permission, the CRU may attempt to find an attorney who can assist you as the CRU conducts a more thorough review of your application and your claims.

During the investigation process, the CRU cannot promise to waive deadlines you may be facing if you have filed or intend to file post-conviction motions. If you have legal claims you are pursuing, you will need to make sure you continue to follow the court's rules and all deadlines that apply to your case unless the court agrees to set aside those deadlines.
