

16th Annual TALGS Conference 2019

Sponsored by Greensboro College's Department of English and East Carolina University's Department of English

Early Registration:
January 15, 2019

Date of Conference:
February 9, 2019

Greensboro College—Greensboro, NC
Cowan Humanities Building
Proctor Hall

Keynote Speaker: Dr. Deborah J. Short

Deborah J. Short, Ph.D., directs Academic Language Research & Training, LLC and provides professional development on academic literacy, content-based ESL, and sheltered instruction worldwide. As a former Division Director at the Center for Applied Linguistics, she co-developed the SIOP Model for sheltered instruction. She has directed research and program evaluations for the Carnegie Corporation of New York, the Rockefeller Foundation, the U.S. Department of Education, and the U.S. Department of Justice. Publications include SIOP Model books, ESL textbooks for National Geographic/Cengage, and professional journal articles. She taught ESL/EFL in New York, California, Virginia, and DR Congo. She recently led TESOL's 6 Principles writing team and served on TESOL's Board of Directors.

Conference information: The TALGS (TESOL/Applied Linguistics Graduate Students) conference aims to provide a professional forum for graduate students, teachers, and researchers whose work relates to a variety of Applied Linguistics topics, including, for example, instructional design and practices in teaching English as a second or foreign language, foreign languages, and content in classrooms with English language learners. Committed to helping improve the educational experience of language learners in our schools, TALGS offers a stimulating environment for practitioners and researchers to present their projects, network, and learn from one another. The event is a continuing education opportunity (CEU) for North Carolina teachers.

For More Information, visit <http://www.ecu.edu/cs-cas/engl/talgs/>