Dear colleagues,

RE: eRedbook

NHSE London's contract with Sitekit, the provider of the digital red book (eRedbook) ends on 31 March 2023. A national strategy is being developed.

This means that the eRedbook facility to receive and store details of newborn screening, immunisation and other features will no longer be available for babies living in London. Sitekit are also writing to parents and carers in London who have signed up to the eRedbook to let them know from 1 April 2023 no new data will flow into their eRedbook. These parents will have an opportunity to copy their personal data prior to the London eRedbook service closure in July 2023.

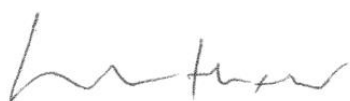

What this may mean for your service:

- Any data that you are accessing through eRedbook will no longer be available
- You will not be able to input data into eRedbook
- The paper-based red book will continue to be the definitive parent-held record for children's immunisations, health reviews and screening tests until a national solution for a digital personal child health record is in place. Each child who currently has an eRedbook should also have had a paper-based red book, which is kept up to date with key health information such as immunisation records, height and weight.

We would like to thank for your support of eRedbook in London. We will keep you updated on the future developments of the digital personal child health record.

If you have any queries, please email: england.london.e-redbookqueries@nhs.net

Yours sincerely,

Will Huxter
