

The Administration for Children and Families invites you to a

Black Experience Community Roundtable

Your voice matters!

Are you and your family participating in programs like Head Start, child care, cash assistance, and foster care? Did you know that the federal government funds these and other human services through grants to states, tribes, territories, and non-profit organizations?

The Administration for Children and Families (ACF) is hosting roundtable discussions with the public to hear directly from Black and African American people about their experiences with our programs, and their encounters with racism and bias when doing so. We want to understand how ACF can improve our engagement and communication with Black people and communities.

Our goal is to listen, learn, and understand challenges so we can address the barriers that Black people are facing. We want to center the perspectives of our program participants into our policies, programs, and operations.

We invite you to join us and let your voice be heard! Anything shared by participants will remain anonymous and confidential and will not impact your services in any way.
