Gov. Evers granted pardons to the following people:

- Anthony Birts was found to be in possession of controlled substances and later fraudulently purchased cars from a tow lot he worked at without authorization. Now, over two decades later, Birts has earned a degree in electrical power distribution and several employment-related certificates. The District Attorney's Office supports his pardon.
- Jane Bowser was in her teens when she and others entered a home and took items without permission. Now, nearly three decades later, Bowser is an active member of her community, volunteering her time at a railroad museum, local theaters, and a community organization that promotes education and literacy, as well as a nonprofit organization that supports victims and survivors of domestic violence. The District Attorney's Office supports her pardon.
- Marcus Bush made fraudulent coin deposits at a bank where he worked as a teller. Now, two decades later, Bush has earned a bachelor's degree in information technology, is a first responder, and is an active volunteer within his community. The District Attorney's Office supports his pardon.
- Christopher Condiff furnished a firearm to an unauthorized person. Later, he took a vehicle without consent, and he entered a home without permission and took items. Now, more than 13 years later, Condiff has shown personal growth and positive adjustment, has completed employment-related certifications and professional development, and is an active member of his community. The District Attorney's Office supports his pardon.
- Tracey Davis attempted to pass a false check and deposit it into her bank account. Now, more than two decades later, Davis has become a licensed foster parent and volunteers at a local elementary school. The District Attorney's Office supports her pardon.
- Tommy Fleischfresser was found to be in possession of marijuana plants. Later, he entered a business without permission and stole alcohol and was later found to be in possession of firearms, which violated a condition of his felony conviction. Now, more than two decades later, Fleischfresser has shown personal growth and positive adjustment and has pursued further professional development, earning employment-related certifications.
- Ethan Garner was in his teens when he and another individual entered a home without permission and stole items. Now, more than a decade later, Garner has earned a High School Equivalency Degree (HSED), has volunteered with a natural disaster relief initiative, and is an active member of his faith community. The Court supports his pardon, and Garner received robust support from friends, family, and community members.
- LaDaniel Gillispie was in his teens when he and another individual robbed a grocery store while armed. Later, he was found to be in possession of marijuana and other controlled substances. Now, more than two decades later, Gillispie has shown personal growth and positive adjustment and has earned both his HSED and a Commercial Driver's License (CDL).
- David Gobeli fraudulently used his company's credit card for personal expenses. Now, more than two decades later, Gobeli has shown personal growth and positive adjustment and is an active volunteer within his community.
- Corey Harris was in his teens when he and two other individuals broke into a home and stole several items. Now, more than two decades later, Harris has earned his GED, obtained a special education license, become a licensed youth pastor, and is an active member of his faith community. The District Attorney's Office supports his pardon.

- Adam Hollis was in his teens when he and other individuals broke into several storage units and a house and stole various items. Now, more than a decade and a half later, Hollis has shown personal growth and positive adjustment, has pursued further professional development, and volunteers at an animal shelter.
- Stacy Hoyt stole controlled substances from her employer. Now, nearly a decade later, Hoyt is an active member of the Alcohol and Other Drug Abuse community, sponsoring women and veterans in their recovery journeys, and speaking at different detox and residential facilities. Hoyt received robust support from friends, family, and community members who attest to her moral character. Additionally, the Court and the District Attorney's Office support her pardon.
- Rodney Karaba sold livestock that were on loan to him without the permission of the owner. Now, more than three decades later, Karaba has shown personal growth and positive adjustment and is an active member of his community.
- Timothy Kroll set his vehicle on fire for the purpose of receiving an insurance payout. Now, more than two decades later, Kroll has completed a carpentry apprenticeship, volunteers with an organization that supports underrepresented populations in certain trades, and is an active member within his community. Kroll has received robust support from friends, family, and community members who attest to his moral character. Additionally, the District Attorney's Office supports his pardon.
- Cedric Owens was in his teens when he and another individual stole several items from a residence without the owner's permission. Now, more than two decades later, Owens has shown personal growth and positive adjustment, has obtained a GED, and volunteers coaching youth basketball.
- Monte Smith was in his teens when he broke into his workplace and stole money from the safe. Now, more than three decades later, Smith has shown personal growth and positive adjustment and is an active member of his faith community. The District Attorney's Office supports his pardon.
- Melvin Thomas Jr. was in his teens when he took and drove a vehicle without the permission of the owner. Later, on separate occasions, he and other individuals stole items from people while armed. Now, over three decades later, Thomas earned an HSED and several other employment-related certifications and licenses. The victim from his first case supports a pardon. Thomas received robust support from friends, family, and community members who attest to his moral character.
- Ryan Turcotte was in his teens when he took a handgun from a police officer's residence without permission during a party hosted by the police officer's son. Later, Turcotte drove a vehicle while under the influence of a prescription medication, eventually causing an accident in which his passenger suffered severe injuries. Now, almost two decades later, Turcotte has shown personal growth and positive adjustment, has earned an executive chef accreditation, and volunteers with organizations providing food to those in need. The victim in his second case supports a pardon. Additionally, Turcotte received robust support from friends, family, and community members who attest to his moral character.
- Paul Zasadny falsely presented legal mushrooms as illegal, hallucinogenic mushrooms and subsequently sold them to undercover police officers and was later found to have marijuana on his person. Now, a decade and a half later, Zasadny has shown personal growth and positive adjustment, volunteers at a food pantry, and is an active member of his faith community.

- Melissa Brauer was found to be in possession of controlled substances and drug paraphernalia in her vehicle and her residence. Now, over a decade later, Brauer is currently pursuing a bachelor's degree in business management, participates in community sporting events, and has shown personal growth and positive adjustment.
- Melissa Brusky and other individuals took and drove a vehicle without permission and took various items from a residence. Now, over two decades later, Brusky obtained an associate degree, completed college coursework, and is an active volunteer in her community.
- Kingston Brown Sr. sold a controlled substance to a confidential informant and an officer and was found to be in possession of marijuana and drug paraphernalia after officers executed a search warrant. Later, Brown was found to be in possession of marijuana after officers conducted a traffic stop. Now, over a decade later, Brown obtained a CDL and forklift certification, completed automotive technician coursework, and is an active member in his community. Brown received robust support from friends, family, and community members who attest to his moral character.
- Jacob Carlin was in his teens when he sold marijuana and a controlled substance to a confidential informant and was later found to be in possession of marijuana. Now, almost a decade later, Carlin earned an associate degree in web and software development, volunteered at local fundraisers, and has shown personal growth and positive adjustment. The Court supports his pardon.
- Steven Dalton sold a controlled substance to undercover officers, was found to be in possession of a controlled substance, and later sold a controlled substance to an undercover officer again. Now, over two decades later, Dalton completed a technical college welding program, pursued further professional development, and has shown personal growth and positive adjustment.
- Laconiya Evans wrote a check on a bank account without permission and later entered a residence, stole blank checks and a purse, and fled from officers during a traffic stop. Now, over two decades later, Evans obtained an associate degree in social work, earned a CDL, completed employment-related certifications, and is an active volunteer in her community. The District Attorney's Office supports her pardon.
- Alyssa Garcia helped an individual escape and abscond from a correctional setting. Today, Garcia has pursued further professional development and is an active volunteer in her community. The District Attorney's Office supports her pardon.
- Anitria Hickman and other individuals made unauthorized purchases. Now, over two decades later, Hickman obtained a bachelor's degree in economics, is an active volunteer in her community, and has shown personal growth and positive adjustment. The District Attorney's Office supports her pardon.
- Steven Johnson was in his teens when he was with another individual who sold a controlled substance to an undercover officer. Later, Johnson was found to be in possession of a firearm. Now, over three decades later, Johnson earned a GED and a professional license, completed employment-related certifications, and is an active volunteer and member in his community. The District Attorney's Office supports his pardon.

- DeMantre Jones was found to be in possession of marijuana, controlled substances, and drug paraphernalia when officers executed a search warrant. Now, almost two decades later, Jones received employment-related awards and is an active volunteer and member of his community. The District Attorney's Office supports his pardon.
- Jeffrey King wrote checks to himself using money from a local organization he served on. Now, over two decades later, King graduated from a citizen police academy, obtained employment-related certifications and training, and is an active volunteer and member in his community.
- James Komp was found to be in possession of marijuana when officers conducted a traffic stop. Now, over two decades later, Komp obtained an HSED, is an active volunteer and member of his church and community, and has shown personal growth and positive adjustment.
- Lloyd Lewin sold a controlled substance to a confidential informant and later was found to be in possession of controlled substances when officers conducted a traffic stop. Now, over a decade later, Lewin earned a bachelor's degree in business management, a master's degree in business administration, is an active volunteer and member of his community and church, and has shown personal growth and positive adjustment.
- Michael Literski and other individuals sold marijuana and controlled substances from his residence. Now, over a decade later, Literski obtained a CDL, is an active volunteer and member of his church, and has shown personal growth and positive adjustment. The District Attorney's Office supports his pardon.
- David Mell was found to be in possession of marijuana after officers conducted a traffic stop on his vehicle. Now, over a decade later, Mell earned a professional license, obtained employment-related certificates, and volunteered in his community.
- Cameron Miller failed to stop after officers attempted to conduct a traffic stop on his vehicle. Now, over a decade later, Miller obtained a GED, completed trade school, and earned a boilermakers apprenticeship certificate.
- Eric Moll was in his teens when he failed to stop his vehicle while officers attempted to conduct a traffic stop. Now, over two decades later, Moll has completed employment-related training and is an active volunteer and member of his community. The District Attorney's Office supports his pardon.
- Jesse Moore Jr. was in his teens when he and another individual entered and stole from properties without permission. Now, over a decade later, Moore completed a millwright apprenticeship program and is an active volunteer in his community.
- Michael Peck was in his teens when he entered stores and stole items without permission. Later, officers executed a search warrant of his residence where they discovered marijuana and drug paraphernalia. Now, five decades later, Peck completed employment-related training and certifications and has shown personal growth and positive adjustment.
- Chad Pierce entered a residence without permission and attempted to steal items and later was found to be in possession of a firearm. Now, two decades later, Pierce obtained employment-related certifications and is an active volunteer in his community.
- Gregory Powell was twice found to be in possession of marijuana and a controlled substance when officers conducted a traffic stop. Now, over two decades later, Powell has completed employment-related training and certifications and is an active volunteer and member of his community and church. The Court and District Attorney's Office support a pardon.

- Aaron Rowe was in his teens when he purchased gasoline under a different name and later took items from a residence while housesitting. Now, over a decade later, Rowe has completed employment-related training and coursework, is an active volunteer and member of his community, and has shown personal growth and positive adjustment.
- Nataly Siharath and another individual stole personal identifying information from their employer to order checks, credit cards, and access funds without permission. Now, almost two decades later, Siharath obtained a professional license, completed employment-related certifications, and is an active volunteer member of her community and church. The District Attorney's Office supports her pardon.
- Shakila Stewart was in her teens when she stole merchandise from a store. Now, over a decade later, Stewart obtained an associate degree in health science and is an active volunteer in her church.
- Nicholas Walkey sold marijuana and a controlled substance to a confidential informant, and later officers executed a search warrant of his residence and discovered marijuana and drug paraphernalia. Now, a decade later, Walkey completed employment-related certifications and is an active volunteer and member of his community.
- Marquish Washington and other individuals took a wallet. Now, over three decades later, Washington obtained an HSED, completed college coursework, and is an active volunteer in his community and member of his church. The District Attorney's Office supports his pardon.
- Jonathan Wichlacz was in his teens when he and another individual broke into multiple buildings and stole various items. Now, over two decades later, Wichlacz obtained an associate degree, earned a CDL, obtained employment-related certifications, and has shown personal growth and positive adjustment. Wichlacz received robust support from friends, family, and community members who attest to his moral character.
- Jessica Barker was found manufacturing and delivering a controlled substance. Now, over a decade later, Barker obtained an associate degree, is an active volunteer and member of her community, and has shown personal growth and positive adjustment.
- Jeffrey Bigelow sold a controlled substance to an undercover officer. Now, over three decades later, Bigelow obtained a high school diploma, completed college coursework, and is an active volunteer in his community.
- Gene Burnett was found in possession of marijuana with intent to sell after arranging an exchange with an undercover officer. Now, more than two decades later, Burnett obtained his GED, obtained employment-related certifications, and is an active volunteer in his community. The Court supports his pardon.
- Eugene Cox was found to be in possession of a controlled substance with the intent to deliver during a traffic stop. Four years later, Cox was found to be in possession of a controlled substance with the intent to deliver during an encounter with the police. Now, over two decades later, Cox obtained a CDL, earned employment-related certifications, and has shown personal growth and positive adjustment.
- LaRon Franklin manufactured and sold a controlled substance to a confidential informant across three transactions. Later, Franklin was found to be in possession of a controlled substance during a traffic stop. Now, over two decades later, Franklin obtained an HSED, completed employment-related certifications, and has shown personal growth and positive adjustment.

- Danielle Gallops was in her teens when she sold a controlled substance to a confidential informant three times while on bail. Now, a decade later, Gallops has obtained an associate degree in human services and is currently completing a bachelor's degree in social work, has obtained numerous employment-related certifications, is an active volunteer in her community, and has shown personal growth and positive adjustment. The Court supports her pardon, and Gallops received robust support from friends, family, and community members.
- Precious Goston sold a controlled substance to an undercover officer. Now nearly a decade later, Goston obtained multiple employment-related certifications, started a business, is an active volunteer and member of her community, and has shown personal growth and positive adjustment. Goston received robust support from friends, family, and community members.
- Eldricht Hill was found to be in possession of marijuana. Now, over two decades later, Hill is an active member of his community and has shown personal growth and positive adjustment.
- Irene Howard was found with marijuana in her purse and in her residence. Now, nearly three decades later, Howard obtained an associate degree in accounting and is working toward a bachelor's degree, completed employment-related certifications, became a business owner, and is an active member and volunteer of her community. The Court supports her pardon.
- Andre Jedkins was in his teens when he was discovered to be in possession of a controlled substance with the intent to deliver. Now, almost three decades later, Jedkins obtained two associate degrees in biomedical engineering technology and electrical engineering technology, is an active volunteer in his community, and has shown personal growth and positive adjustment.
- David Joly was pulled over for smoking marijuana while driving and was found to have more marijuana in his vehicle. Now, two decades later, Joly obtained a GED and an associate degree in drafting and design, earned a CDL, and has shown personal growth and positive adjustment.
- Jason Josing was found in possession of controlled substances after police officers responded to reports of an overdose. Now, over a decade later, Josing obtained an associate degree in applied science, completed employment-related certifications, is an active member of his professional community, and has shown personal growth and positive adjustment.
- Dae Kim was found to be in possession of a controlled substance after an officer searched his vehicle. Now, over two decades later, Kim completed employment-related certifications, started a business, is an active member of his community, and has shown personal growth and positive adjustment.
- Carla Krentz was in her teens when undercover officers bought marijuana from dealers who were operating out of her home. Now, three decades later, Krentz obtained a technical diploma in computer repair, is an active volunteer in her community, and has shown personal growth and positive adjustment.

- Jermaine Little sold a controlled substance to an undercover officer. Now, two decades later, Little started a business, completed employment-related certifications, and is an active member of his community.
- Angelo Pettaway was found to be in possession of a controlled substance during an arrest for a previous incident. Now, over two decades later, Pettaway is an active member of his community and has shown personal growth and positive adjustment.
- Kimberley Richards was found to be in possession of marijuana during a traffic stop. Now, two decades later, Richards has obtained an associate degree in nursing, earned a professional license and other employment-related certifications, and is an active member of her community.
- Jose Salinas was found to be in possession of marijuana after police officers executed a search warrant on his residence. Now, three decades later, Salinas has shown personal growth and positive adjustment.
- Shelly Scott sold a controlled substance to a confidential informant. Now, nearly two decades later, Scott pursued college coursework in social work, is an active volunteer within her community, and has shown personal growth and positive adjustment. The District Attorney's Office supports her pardon.
- Stephen Smith was found to be in possession of marijuana after police officers and a federal agent executed a search warrant at his residence. Now, over three decades later, Smith obtained two associate degrees in Substance Use Disorder Counseling and Human Services, completed employment-related certifications, and is an active member and volunteer within his community. The Court supports his pardon, and Smith received robust support from friends, family, and community members who attest to his moral character.
- Rudy Steinhoff sold prescription drugs to a confidential informant and was also found to be in possession of a controlled substance after officers obtained a warrant to search his car. Now, over a decade later, Steinhoff has shown personal growth and positive adjustment.
- Scott Steinmetz sold a controlled substance to an undercover officer on two occasions. Now, over three decades later, Steinmetz has completed courses at a technical college and has shown personal growth and positive adjustment.
- Lyndsay Tormey sold a controlled substance to an undercover officer. Now, two decades later, Tormey has pursued further education and is an active member and volunteer in her community.
- Cheng Vue was found to be in possession of a controlled substance during a traffic stop. Now, over a decade later, Vue completed college courses and has shown personal growth and positive adjustment.
- Terrell West was found to be in possession of marijuana during a traffic stop. Now, over a decade later, West is an active member of his community, volunteers with his church, and has shown personal growth and positive adjustment. The Court supports his pardon, and West received robust support from friends, family, and community members who attest to his moral character.
- Hassan Wiley was found to be in possession of a controlled substance after officers searched his residence. Now, nearly three decades later, Wiley obtained an HSED, earned a CNA certification, and has shown personal growth and positive adjustment.

- Katie Wondrash was found to be in possession of controlled substances. Now, over a decade later, Wondrash has obtained an associate degree in manufacturing operations management, completed employment-related certifications, and is an active volunteer and member of her community. The Court and District Attorney's Office support her pardon.
- Sor Yang was in his teens when he was found to be in possession of a controlled substance after officers executed a search warrant at his residence. Now, over two decades later, Yang has completed employment-related certifications and has shown personal growth and positive adjustment.
- TJ Yarbrough was in his teens when he was found to be in possession of a controlled substance and marijuana. Now, over two decades later, Yarbrough has completed employment-related certifications and has shown personal growth and positive adjustment.